I would whole heartedly support the amendment to allow citation to uncited opinions, with the reservation that this should be only in effect beginning on a certain date. The Ninth Circuit has published many opinions in the past that arguably may not have otherwise been published in other circuits, thus there are many problematic decisions (for all parties) floating around from the 9th Circuit (in due part of the largeness of the circuit and number of opinions, there are more than a few decisions that have been made contrary to circuit precedent).

This is a comment only from myself and does not reflect the views of any other party or agency.
